"I won't stay home and take care of my grandmother and look after my brothers and sweep and slave. I'm only fourteen years old and I like to have fun. I like to dance and I like to enjoy myself. I don't care if they do send me away. I won't have to work

She is a Handsome Girl.

She is a big, handsome creature, with black hair, big, large blue eyes, and a figure much more mature than that of the average chidl of her age. Whe seems absolutely devoid of a sense f right and wrong.

Genevieve obey. She had to call in the Gerry Society, and Genevieve was urned over to the Brooklyn Training chool for Young Girls, but Miss Elizaoth Brewster, superintendent of the school, could not manage her, and she was returned to the court.

wieve's mother went once more to the Children's Society and saked for another trial for her daughter, but the girl disappointed all promises.

Mrs. Krommes is a young and goodwoman of thirty-three, whose husband died five years ago. She has struggled to do the best one could for two girls and two little boys, and the only way she could do it was by poing out to work every day.

"I hope no other mother who has used her best efforts to bring up her children properly will suffer as I have is incorrigible. I have tried every

Has a Strong Will. "Ever since she was a little girl she band insisted on my giving him my has had a terrible temper and a strong will. I sent her to work when she would take her wages and buy jewelry with it for a boy she liked. Then she gave up work entirely, and when I asked her to take care of her grandmother, who is dying with consumption, she used to beat the poor old lady unmercifully. She beat her little brothers because they would not do all the housework. One night the whole block was aroused by the cruel beating she gave Harry. Nothing on earth can tame her."

The girl once took a new serge dress from her grandmother, cut it up and made a dress for a child across the street.

When her mother was at work she would dress up in her Sunday clothes and prage the treet.

Mrs. Raymond MacCracken Makes Vigorous Response in Divorce Action.

A voluntary co-respondent is the striking feature in a remerkable divorce case argued to-day before Judge Addoma in Supreme Court, Special Term, ernment offices & Washington, ap-Part One this morning.

The case is that of Raymond Mac-Cracken against his wife, Eleanor Macracken, and the co-respondent named is David B. Castle, son of Alderman George A. Castle, of the Eighteenth house at No. 8 let Forty-fifth street.

Mrs. McCracken, who is young and a suspicious perpi pretty, says she is horrified at the baseness and decest that have in- swer she had to he charges against volved her in this suit and through her she replied: her lawyer, David W. Rockmore, says she will not only disprove all the was only to tide or financial troubles charges but will show up a gang of semporarily. In www days everything ntriguers. The domestic idyl of the would have been a right.

McCrackens began Jan. 8, 1906. 'My husband refused to suport me." said Mrs. McCracken. "He kept moving way, who told temagistrate that he me about from one furnished room to knew the womar ad her family, and another and then when I asked for permanent home he drove me away. such a plight. "As soon as MacCracken fird his suit for divorce, naming Castle as correspondent, Mrs. MacCracken, through Mr. Rockmore, applied for alimony, charging that her husband, who is an insurance agent, does not support her. MacCracken, in his application for divorce, gives numerous dates and places where Castle and his wife are alleged to have been seen together. His chief witnesses are Quincy Tucker and William Fanners.

When her mother was at work she would dress up in her Sunday clothes and parade the streets.

She never cleaned the house, and she never took care of her old grandmother. She just ran away from home and went about with boys, attended the theatre and said she didn't care for anybody—she wanted to have a good time.

She is exceptionally bright, but her animal nature is so strong that she has no control of herself.

"It's not my fault if I am bad," said Genevieve. "I never had a chance to have any fun unless I just took it. Anyway, I'm going to be an actress."

Judge Wilkin' and Genevieve's mother say her histrionic aspirations will have to be postponed. Anyway, the worst girl in Brooklyn has been sent to the Protestant Episcopal Home of Mercy to think oyer whether it is nicer to stay at home and do the work than to stay in a big institution all the time, where she can't go to the theatre at all.
